*Wine Terms

Pet nat — Pétillant naturel

A process of producing sparkling wine that predates the champagne method, and is more closely aligned with the production method of cider. The process involves bottling before the fermentation process is complete, so the fermentation by-product, CO₂, is captured in the bottle.

Minimal intervention / natural

Minimal intervention means winemaking that doesn't add or remove anything at the cellar. It's about turning grapes into wine with as little interference from the winemaker as possible.

Skin contact

When people talk about skin-contact wines, they are usually referring to white wines that have been left to macerate on skins, a method that in most conventional wine making is usually avoided. The skins contain color pigment, phenols and tannins that would normally be considered undesirable for white wines. In some circumstances the wine can become orange in colour. Our list contains many skin contact whites, which we have denoted by SC, and a few “orange wines” that have been given their own space on the list.

Pink Wines

Pink wines in the case of our wine list refer to a blend of white and red grapes. The style is commonly referred to as a Rose.
